Personal log #1

This is not the first time I've worked with Hannah, and we've always been a great team. We both have ideas that complement each other, and the results are usually satisfactory for both parties. Although on this occasion, due to scheduling issues, it was a little more complicated to coincide to do the work, since in our opinion it was easier to collaborate in person than online, we managed to finish the first part of the project on time.

As for the division of labor, I usually contribute mostly by structuring our ideas and giving a clearer vision of what we want to achieve, as well as researching extra elements that we may need, whether it be information or guides on how to develop a particular function. Hannah usually takes care of more programming, she's more organized in that regard, I've learned a lot by helping her program.

And between the two of us we usually give it the stylization and design that we want, we both like to draw and design a lot, so we tend to be somewhat ambitious in that aspect.

Personal log #2

Personally, I am pleased with what Hannah and I achieved for this delivery. Again, I think our biggest enemy was time and the hassle of getting organized to be able to work together. However, I think we were capable to manage well, we supported each other in what each had to do when it was necessary and in the end we managed to make the progress we wanted for the delivery. I have quite a lot of ambition and expectations for our final delivery.

Personal log #3

As usual, working with my teammate Hannah was a very pleasant and straightforward experience. I truly believe we make a great team, adapting well to challenging moments when they arise. Her approachability and willingness to collaborate made tackling obstacles much more manageable.

At a certain point, I started to feel like I was falling behind in understanding the functionality that the page needed, especially during the transition to React and working with both frontend and backend aspects. However, Hannah was always there to help me grasp the concepts better and guide me through the process. Her support was instrumental in ensuring that the page turned out as we envisioned.

Despite the numerous technical difficulties we faced, I believe that together we managed to deliver a solid piece of work. While there is still much for us to learn, this project demonstrated our ability to overcome challenges and grow as developers. Moving forward, I am confident that we will continue to give our best and improve with every opportunity.